Why H. S. Stout Succeeds.

Here are a few reasons why H. S. Stout has succeeded in building up the largest tailoring business in Paris:

FIRST—He recognized the fact that five years ago that the only day of big profits and small sales was past.

SECOND—He cuts the price of tailor-made garments at least 40 PER CENT.

THIRD—He kept up the quality of his materials, his styles and his workmanship.

FOURTH—He always does as he advertised.

AS A RESULT.

As a result of this system he has built up a large trade that appreciates the fact that they save twenty dollars on a single suit or overcoat. "Many customers at a small profit rather than a few customers at a big profit," says H. S. Stout.

If you want credit, your high-price tailor gladly extends it, for he makes you pay dearly for it in the end.

Why not turn over a new leaf—wear the best, save money, by giving H. S. Stout a trial?

He makes the Finest Imported Suits for

The Cruel Knife!

It is absolutely useless to expect a surgical operation to cure cancer, or any other blood disease. The cruelty of such treatment is illustrated in the alarming number of deaths which result from it. The disease is in the blood, and hence can not be cut out. Nine times out of ten the surgeon's knife only hastens death.

My son had a most malignant Cancer, for which the doctors said an operation was the only hope. The operation was a severe one, as it was necessary to cut down to the jaw bone and scrape it. Before a great while the Cancer returned, and began to grow rapidly. We gave him many remedies without relief, and finally, upon the advice of a friend, decided to try S. S. S. (Swift's Specific), and within the second bottle he began to improve. After twenty bottles had been taken, the Cancer disappeared entirely, and he was cured. The cure was a permanent one, for he is now seventeen years old, and has never had a sign of the dreadful disease to return.

Absolutely the only hope for Cancer is Swift's Specific.

as it is the only remedy which goes to the very bottom of the blood and forces out every trace of the disease. S. S. S. is guaranteed purely vegetable, and contains no potash, mercury, or other mineral.

Books on Cancer will be mailed free to any address by the Swift Specific Co., Atlanta, Ga.

GOING HOME.

Going home—the blithe birds singing
Soft from every bank and spray,
Faint winds to the uplands winging
In verse from the new-mown hay;
O'er her brow the first year's roses,
In her heart Love's first delight;
Going home as sunset closes—
Good-night, pretty one, good-night!

Going home—the dark clouds frowning,
Naught around but ceaseless din,
Even Pity's accents drowning
In the world of tears and sin;
On her brow no longer gladness,
In her heart Care's hopeless blight;
Going home to shade and sadness—
Good-night, weary one, good-night!

Going home—the stars awaking,
Calm above the city's roar,
Tidings unto worn hearts breaking
Of repose for evermore;
On her brow retreating sorrow,
In her heart returning light;
Going home till Joy's good-morrow—
Good-night, happy one, good-night!

PART VI.

The sea cook looked at what had been given him.

"The black spot! I thought so," he observed. "Where might you have got the paper? Why, hillo! look here, now; this ain't lucky! You've gone and cut this out of a Bible. What fool's cut a Bible?"

"Ah, there!" said Morgan—"there. Wot did I say? No good'll come o' that, I said."

"Well, you've about fixed it now, among you," continued Silver. "You'll all swing now, I reckon. What soft-headed lubber had a Bible?"

"It was Dick," said one.

"Dick, was it? Then Dick can get to prayers," said Silver. "He's seen his slice of luck, has Dick, and you may lay to that."

But here the long man with the yellow eyes struck in.

"Belay that talk, John Silver," he said. "This crew has tipped you the black spot in full council, as in dooty bound; just you turn it over, as in dooty bound, and see what's wrote there. Then you can talk."

"Thanky, George," replied the sea cook. "You always was brisk for business, and has the rules by heart, George, as I'm pleased to see. Well, what is it, anyway? Ah! 'Deposed'—that's it, is it? Very pretty wrote, to be sure; like print, I swear. Your hand o' write, George? Why, you was gettin' quite a leadin' man in this here crew. You'll be cap'n next, I shouldn't wonder. Just oblige me with that torch again, will you? This pipe don't draw."

"Come, now," said George, "you don't fool this crew no more. You're a funny man, by your account; but you're over now, and you'll maybe step down off that barrel and help vote."

"I thought you said you knowed the rules," returned Silver, contemptuously. "Leastways, if you don't, I do, and I wait here, and I'm still your cap'n, mind—till you outs with your grievances, and I reply; in the meantime your black spot ain't worth a biscuit. After that we'll see it."

"Oh," replied George, "you don't be under no kind o' apprehension; we're all square, we are. First, you've made a hash of this cruise—you'll be a bold man to say no to that. Second, you let the enemy out o' this here trap for nothing. Why did they want out? I dunno; but it's pretty plain they wanted it. Third, you wouldn't let us go at them upon the march. Oh, we see through you, John Silver; you want to play booty, that's what's wrong with you. And then, fourth, there's this here boy."

"Is that all?" asked Silver, quietly.

"Enough, too," retorted George. "We'll all swing and sun dry for your bungling."

"Well, now, look here, I'll answer these four p'int; one after another I'll answer 'em. I made a hash o' this cruise, did I? Well, now, you all know what I wanted; and you all know, if that had been done, that we'd 'a' been aboard the 'Hispaniola' this night as ever was, every man of us alive, and fit, and full of good plum-duff, and the treasure in the hold of her, by thunder! Well, who crossed me? Who forced my hand, as with the lawful cap'n? Who tipped me the black spot the day we landed and began this dance? Ah, it's a mighty fine dance—I'm with you there—and looks mighty like a horn-pipe in a rope's end at Execution Dock by London town, it does. But who done it? Why, it was Anderson and Hands, and you, George Merry! And you're the last above board of that same meddling crew; and you have the Davy Jones' insolence to up and stand for cap'n over me—you, that sunk the lot of us! By the powers! but this tops the stiffest yarn to nothing."

Silver paused, and I could see by the faces of George and his companions that these words had not been said in vain.

"That's for number one," cried the accused, wiping the sweat from his brow, for he had been talking with a vehemence that shook the house. "Why, I give you my word, I'm sick to speak to you. You've neither sense nor memory, and I leave it to fancy where your mother was that let you come to sea. Sea! Gentleman o' fortune! I reckon tailors is your trade."

"Go on, John," said Morgan. "Speak up to the others."

"Ah, the others!" returned John. "They're a nice lot, ain't they? You say this cruise is bungled! Ah! by gum, if you could understand how bad it's bungled, you would see! We're that near the gibbet that my neck's stiff with thinking on it. You've seen 'em, maybe, hanged in chains, birds about 'em, seamen p'intin' 'em out as they go down with the tide. 'Who's that?' says one. 'That! Why, that's John Silver. I knowed him well,' says another. And you can hear the chains-a-jangle as you go about and reach for the other buoy. Now, that's about where we are, every mother's son of us, thanks to him and Hands, and Anderson, and other ruination fools of you. And if you want to know about number four, and that boy, why, shiver my timbers! isn't he a hostage? Are we going to waste a hostage? No, not us; he might be our last chance, and I shouldn't wonder. Kill that boy? Not me, mates! And number three? Ah, well, there's a deal to say to number three. Maybe you don't count it nothing to have a real college doctor come to see you every day—you, John, with your head broke—or you, George Merry, that had the ague shakes upon you not six hours ago, and has your eyes the color of lemon peel to this same moment on the clock? And maybe, perhaps, you didn't know there was a consort coming, either? But there is, and not so long 'till then; and we'll see who'll be glad to have a hostage when it comes to that. And as for number two, and why I made a bargain—well, you came crawling on your knees to me to make it—on your knees you came, you was that down-hearted—and you'd have starved too, if I hadn't—but that's a trifle! you look there—that's why!"

And he cast down upon the floor a paper that I instantly recognized—none other than the chart on yellow paper, with three red crosses, that I had found in the oilcloth at the bottom of the captain's chest. Why the doctor had given it to him was more than I could fancy.

But if it were inexplicable to me the appearance of the chart was incredible to the surviving mutineers. They leaped upon it like cats upon a mouse. It went from hand to hand, one tearing it from another; and by the oath and the cries and the childish laughter with which they accompanied their examination, you would have thought, not only they were fingering the very gold, but were at sea with it, besides, in safety.

"Yes," said one, "that's Flint, sure enough. J. F., and a score below, with a clove hitch to it, so he done ever."

"Mighty pretty," said George. "But how are we to get away with it, and us no ship?"

Silver suddenly sprang up, and supporting himself with a hand against the wall: "Now, I give you warning, George," he cried. "One more word of your sauce, and I'll call you down and fight you. How? Why, how do I know? You had ought to tell me that—you and the rest, that lose me my schooner, with your interference, burn you! But not you, you can't; you ain't got the invention of a cockroach. But civil you can speak, and shall, George Merry, you may lay to that."

"That's fair enow," said the old man Morgan.

"Fair! I reckon so," said the sea-cook. "You lost the ship; I found the treasure. Who's the better man at that? And now I resign, by thunder! Elect whom you please to be your cap'n now; I'm done with it."

"Silver!" they cried. "Barbecue forever! Barbecue for cap'n!"

"So that's the toon, is it?" cried the cook. "George, I reckon you'll have to wait another turn, friend, and lucky for you as I'm not a revengeful man. But that was never my way. And now, shipmates, this black spot? Tain't much good now, is it? Dick's crossed his luck and spoiled his Bible, and that's about all."

"I'll do to kiss the book on still, won't it?" growled Dick, who was evidently uneasy at the curse he had brought upon himself.

"A Bible with a bit out!" returned Silver, derisively. "Not it. It don't bind no more'n a ballad-book."

"Don't it, though?" cried Dick, with a sort of joy. "Well, I reckon that's worth having, too."

"Here, Jim—here's a curiosity for you," said Silver; and he tossed me the paper.

It was a round about the size of a crown-piece. One side was blank, for it had been the last leaf; the other contained a verse or two of Revelation—these words among the rest, which struck sharply home upon my mind: "Without are dogs and murderers." The printed side had been blackened with wood-ash, which already began to come off and soil my fingers; on the blank side had been written with the same material the one word, "Deposed." I have that curiosity beside me at this moment; but not a trace of writing now remains beyond a single scratch, such as a man might make with his thumb-nail.

That was the end of the night's business. Soon after, with a drink all round, we lay down to sleep, and the outside of Silver's vengeance was to put George Merry up for sentinel, and threaten him with death if he should prove unfaithful.

It was long ere I could close an eye, and Heaven knows I had matter enough for thought in the man whom I had slain that afternoon, in my own most perilous position, and, above all, in the remarkable game that I saw Silver now engaged upon—keeping the mutineers together with one hand, and grasping, with the other, after every means, possible and impossible, to make his peace and save his miserable life. He himself slept peacefully, and snored aloud; yet my heart was sore for him, wicked as he was, to think of the dark perils that environed, and the shameful gibbet that awaited him.

CHAPTER XXX.

ON PAROLE.

I was awakened—indeed, we were all awakened, for I could see even the sentinel shake himself together from where he had fallen against the doorpost by a clear, hearty voice hailing us from the margin of the wood.

"Black-house, aho!" it cried. "Here's the doctor!"

And the doctor it was. Although I was glad to hear the sound, yet my gladness was not without admixture. I remembered with confusion my insubordinate and stealthy conduct; and when I saw where it had brought me—among what companions and surrounded by what dangers—I felt ashamed to look him in the face.

He must have risen in the dark, for the day had hardly come; and when I ran to a loop-hole and looked out I saw him standing, like Silver once before, up to the mid-leg in creeping vapor.

"You, doctor! Top o' the morning to you, sir!" cried Silver, broad awake and beaming with good nature in a moment. "Bright and early, to be sure, and it's the early bird, as the saying goes, that gets the rations. George, shake up your timbers, son, and help Dr. Livesey over the ship's side. All a-doo'n' well, your patients was—all well and merry."

So he pattered on, standing on the hill top, with his crutch under his elbow and one hand upon the side of the log house—quite the old John in voice, manner and expression.

"We've quite a surprise for you, too, sir," he continued. "We've a little stranger here—he! he! A noo boarder and lodger, sir, and looking fit and taut as a fiddle; slep' like a supercargo, he did, right alongside of John—stem to stem we was, all night."

Dr. Livesey was by this time across the stockade and pretty near the cook, and I could hear the alteration in his voice as he said:

"Not Jim?"

"The very same Jim as ever was," says Silver.

The doctor stopped outright, although he did not speak, and it was some seconds before he seemed able to move on.

"Well, well," he said at last, "duty first and pleasure afterward, as you might have said yourself, Silver. Let us overhaul these patients of yours."

A moment afterward he had entered the block-house, and, with one grin nod to me, proceeded with his work among the sick. He seemed to me under no apprehension, though he must have known that his life among these treacherous demons depended on a hair, and he rattled on to his patients as if he were paying an ordinary professional visit in a quiet English family. His manner, I suppose, reacted on the men, for they behaved to him as if nothing occurred—as if he were still ship's doctor and they still faithful hands before the mast.

"You're doing well, my friend," he said to the fellow with the bandaged head, "and if ever any person had a close shave, it was you; your head must be as hard as iron. Well, George, how goes it? You're a pretty color, certainly; why, your liver, man, is upside down. Did you take that medicine? Did he take that medicine, men?"

"Ay, ay, sir, he took it, sure enough," returned Morgan.

"Because, you see, since I am mutineers' doctor, or prison doctor, as I pre-

"And now I should wish to have a talk with that boy," said the doctor.

fer to call it," said Dr. Livesey, in his pleasantest way. "I make it a point of honor not to lose a man for King George (God bless him!) and the galleys."

The rogues looked at each other, but swallowed the home-thrust in silence.

"Dick don't feel well, sir," said one.

"Don't he?" replied the doctor. "Well, step up here, Dick, and let me see your tongue. No, I should be surprised if he did; the man's tongue is fit to frighten the French. Another fever."

"Ah, there," said Morgan, "that comed o' spilling Bibles."

"That comed—as you call it—of being arrant asses," retorted the doctor, "and not having sense enough to know honest air from poison, and the dry land from a vile, pestiferous slough. I think it's only an opinion—that you'll all have the deuce to pay before you get that malaria out of your systems. Camp in a bog, would you? Silver, I'm surprised at you. You're less of a fool than many, take you all round; but you don't appear to me to have the rudiments of a notion of the rules of health. Well," he added, after he had dosed them round, and they had taken his prescriptions, with really laughable humility, more like charity school children than blood-guilty mutineers and pirates—"well, that's done for to-day. And now I should wish to have a talk with that boy, please."

And he nodded his head in my direction carelessly.

George Merry was at the door, spitting and spluttering over some bad-tasted medicine; but at the first word of the doctor's proposal he swung round with a deep flush and cried: "No!" and swore.

Silver struck the barrel with his open hand.

"Si-lence!" he roared, and looked about him positively like a lion. "Doctor," he went on, in his usual tones, "I was a-thinking of that, knowing as how you had a fancy for the boy. We're all humbly grateful for your kindness, and, as you see, puts faith in you, and takes the drugs down like that much grog. And I take it I've found a way us'll suit all. Hawkins, will you give me your word of honor as a young gentleman, for a young gentleman you are, although poor born—your word of honor not to slip your cable?"

I readily gave the pledge required.

"Then, doctor," said Silver, "you just step outside o' that stockade, and once you're there, I'll bring the boy down on the inside, and I reckon you can yarn through the spars. Good-day to you, sir, and all our dooties to the squire and Cap'n Smollett."

The explosion of disapproval, which nothing but Silver's black looks had restrained, broke out immediately the doctor had left the house. Silver was roundly accused of playing double—of trying to make a separate peace for himself—of sacrificing the interests of his accomplices and victims, and, in one word, of the identical, exact thing that he was doing. It seemed to me so obvious, in this case, that I could not imagine how he was to turn their anger. But he was twice the man the rest were, and his last night's victory had given him a huge preponderance on their minds. He called them all the fools and dolts you can imagine, said it was necessary I should talk to the doctor, flattered the chart in their faces, asked them if they could afford to break the treaty the very day they were bound a-treasure hunting.

"No, by thunder!" he cried, "it's us must break the treaty when the time comes; and till then I'll gammon that doctor, if I have to ile his boots with brandy."

And then he bade them get the fire lighted and stalked out upon his crutch, with his hand on my shoulder, leaving them in a disarray, and silenced by his volubility, rather than convinced.

"Slow, lad, slow," he said. "They might round upon us in a twinkling of an eye, if we were seen to hurry."

Very deliberately, then, did we advance across the sand to where the doctor waited us on the other side of the stockade, and as soon as we were within easy speaking distance Silver stopped.

"You'll make a note of this here, also, doctor," says he, "and the boy'll tell you how I saved his life, and were deposed for it, too, and you may lay to that. Doctor, when a man's steering as near the wind as me—playing chuck-farthing with the last breath in his body, like—you wouldn't think it too much, mayhap, to give him one good word! You'll please bear in mind it's not my life only now—it's that boy's into the bargain; and you'll speak me fair, doctor, and give me a bit o' hope to go on, for the sake o' mercy."

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

SHE WON THE CASE.

But had to resort to desperate means to do it.

"I'll tell you, Grace," said the head of the big law firm as he sat that evening with his only daughter, "I can't conscientiously sanction this proposed union. The young man is a briefless barrister. The chances are perhaps one in fifty that he has the qualities which win success, but I do not propose to subject you to any such hazard. You may consider his suit rejected."

"But is there no test? Must two lives be spoiled because you cannot fathom the future far enough to see that he will honor your profession? Up to a certain point I will obey you, father, but I decline to be made the victim of any fatuous prejudice. Is there no way in which a young man can prove his worthiness without waiting years for a chance to show his mettle?"

"O, yes, my dear, if you do not care to await the somewhat tedious process of evolution. This young man is to try a case against me to-morrow. I admit that the law and the evidence are both on my side, but it's the best I see for you now. If he wins the case I will sanction the marriage."

Did she sleep that night? Not if her own word be allowed to settle the matter. She wrote note after note and each note went by messenger boy. She urged her young knight to do his best and not to yield as long as there was a fighting chance that he might win. In the small hours of the morning came one of those inspirations that only come with dreams. With the stealthiness of a burglar she concealed every material article of outdoor wear that belonged to her doting but self-opinionated father. The young man won by default. In the secrecy of his chamber the old lawyer swore like a pirate. But he had promised.—Detroit Free Press.

Delicate Hint.

Dean Hole, in his "Little Tour in Ireland," says that when one of his party went a-fishing, it was to come home in triumph, bearing a glorious salmon, its silver scales glittering in the sun. Naturally he was in good humor, and well disposed to pay the fisherman who had accompanied him. This was the dialogue as the two men stepped on shore:

"Boutman," said the happy tourist, "how much is the boat?"

"Sure, your honor, the boat'll be in the bill. Your honor'll give the boatman what you please."

"But what is generally given?"

"Well, your honor, some'll give two shillings, and some is pence. A tailor'd be for giving 18 pence."

How much the passenger gave is not known, but surely he was not inclined to be classed with stay-at-home tailors, not accustomed to "sport."

A Bad Boy's Answer.

"Johnnie," said the schoolboy's mother, "do you like your arithmetic?"

"No'm, I think the influence of that book is unwholesome and depressing."

"Why?"

"Because it is full of horrible examples."

And his mother was so stunned that she forgot to punish him.—Tit-Bits.

TERRIFIC BATTLE

Heavy Engagement Between American and Spanish Forces.

FIGHTING LASTED ALL DAY FRIDAY.

Outer Works Were Carried by Our Forces.

Three-Quarters of a Mile Between City and Our Lines.

Troops Are Entrenching and Forces Will Be Augmented.

Lawton's Division and Baker's Brigade Carried El Caney Friday Evening.

Fighting Resumed Saturday Morning—Gen. Shafter Reports Our Loss Above 400, of These Not Many Killed—Spanish Loss Not Known, But Heavy.

PLAYA DEL ESTE, Province of Santiago de Cuba, July 2.—A general assault on Santiago de Cuba by the land and sea forces of the United States began Friday morning. The Vesuvius used her dynamite guns with good effect.

WASHINGTON, July 2.—Gen. Shafter reported to the president that he began the attack on Santiago Friday morning and it is now going on, beginning with active skirmishes.

The war department at 10:30 received a dispatch stating that the battle at Santiago had begun. The fighting started Friday morning in front of Gen. Shafter's headquarters and it was announced as most desperate.

Gen. Lawton, who was chosen for the important and responsible duty of opening the battle by the capture of Caney and the interception of Spanish reinforcements, now nearing Santiago, is described as a good fighter and a soldier of experience and ability. He served in the union army throughout the war, having entered as sergeant of Company E, 9th Indiana volunteer infantry in April, 1861, and being raised successively through merit in field of battle to first lieutenant of the 20th Indiana infantry, in August, 1861; to captain in May, 1862, and lieutenant colonel in November, 1864. In March, 1865, he was breveted colonel for gallant and meritorious services during the war. He entered the regular establishment in July, 1866.

SIBONEY, July 2, via Playa del Este, Guanatanimo Bay.—At 1 o'clock Friday afternoon after five hours terrific fighting, the Spanish began to leave their entrenchments and retreat into the city. Many Americans were wounded and are brought in. One man had both arms shot off and was shot in the hip, but was laughing.

The fighting continued until dark. Our forces carried the enemy's outer works and occupied them Friday evening. The battle will probably be resumed at daybreak.

The American loss is heavy. Some estimates place it at 500 killed and wounded.

WASHINGTON, July 2.—The war department has received the following from Gen. Shafter dated at Siboney:

"Had a very heavy engagement today which lasted from 8 a. m. till sundown. We have carried their outer works and are now in possession of them. There is now about three-quarters of a mile of open between my lines and the city."

"By morning troops will be entrenched and considerable augmentation of forces will be there. Gen. Lawton's division and Gen. Bates' brigade, which have been engaged all day in carrying El Caney, will be in line and in front of Santiago during the night."

"I regret to say that our casualties will be above 400. Of these not many killed."

In their operations about Aguadores the Americans were greatly encouraged by the work of the fleet, which poured a heavy fire into the lines of the Spaniards.

Two companies of Roosevelt's rough riders and the 3d, 6th and 21st infantry successfully attacked the northeast side of the defenses near Santiago Friday afternoon. They were clear in front of the general advance, fighting like demons. It was in this engagement that men of the 21st lost their lives.

Adm. Sampson ordered the New York, Gloucester and Swamaw to attack the batteries recently placed to the east of Morro. The vessels engaged the batteries at short range and left only the scarred hillside to show where the batteries had been located.

The Massachusetts and the New York troops then opened with their big guns, plunging a heavy fire into the enemy's lines. Common shell and reduced charges were used for the purpose and they demoralized the enemy's ranks. The shells were fired at a high elevation so as to clear the towering coast line ridge.

The Newark joined the fleet Friday morning, and at noon the Iowa steamed within 1,000 yards of Morro castle.

The Harvard arrived at Altare Friday morning with 1,800 Michigan volunteers. They were hurried ashore and hastened forward to join the American line.

As the enemy was pressed back toward Santiago both at Caney and at Aguadores, the progress of our troops was in entire harmony with the plans of Gen. Shafter. Our lines thus became more closely knit and now the Americans and Cubans present a continuous front from the southeast to the north of the city.

On the right at El Caney now is Gen. H. W. Lawton, with three brigades, the first under Col. J. J. Van Horn, commanding the 8th U. S. A. and 22nd United States infantry, and the 2nd Massachusetts Infantry, Col. E. P. Clark commanding.

The 2nd brigade is composed of the 1st, 4th and 25th United States infantry.

The Third brigade, under Gen. A. R. Chaffee, is composed of the 7th, 12th and 17th United States infantry.

Gen. Joseph Wheeler, with four light batteries, is strung out in the rear of Lawton's division. Gen. S. B. M. Young is attached to Gen. Wheeler's command.

This cavalry force is dismounted, and is composed of eight troops of the 1st cavalry, eight troops of the 3d, eight troops of the 6th, eight troops of the 9th and eight troops of the 10th.

On the left of Lawton, in the center, resting on the second crossing of the river Guama, just back of Sevilla, and moving toward Aguadores, is a force composed of the 1st brigade under Gen. H. S. Hawkins, with the 16th and 6th United States infantry; the 71st New York, under Col. Wallace Downes; the 3d brigade, Col. Pierson commanding; 2d United States infantry, 10th United States infantry, 21st United States infantry; 3d brigade, Col. Worth commanding, 9th, 13th and 24th United States infantry.

Gen. Bates has the 33d Michigan, Col. Charles L. Boyton commanding.

Brig. Gen. Kent, who commanded the center of the general line of attack, started the 21st regiment of regulars toward Aguadores at the same hour Gen. Lawton's men advanced toward Caney. Upon these troops fell brunt of the battle to the southeast of Santiago during the early hours of the day. This division of Gen. Kent's forces sustained the heaviest loss of the engagement.

There was desperate fighting about Aguadores. Acting under orders from Gen. Linares the Spaniards at that point returned the American fire with a fury that aroused our men to the fiercest determination.

They boldly faced the enemy's fire, holding their ground tenaciously, and pressing forward whenever an opportunity to gain an advanced position presented itself.

WASHINGTON, July 2.—Late advices at the war department are to the effect that the Americans lost 500 killed in the assault Friday and a large number of wounded. In the latter case no exact count has been received. It is clear from this and other information which the war department must have received, but which it has suppressed, that the American forces have not met with the success which had been hoped for by Gen. Shafter.

WASHINGTON, July 2.—Just two months after the battle of Manila and on the first day of the month, like that glorious engagement, began the first set battle of the war in this hemisphere. What the result will be was not known when the department closed. Never before since the declaration of war has there been such a feeling of intense interest and anxiety manifested. The officials here are confident that they have done everything possible to strengthen Shafter's hands for the great conflict he is waging and they have an unlimited confidence in his discretion, his bravery and his energy.

The attack Friday, several days before the public mind expected the battle, is a tribute to his energy as well as to his judgment, according to the present lights, for he undoubtedly found it necessary to crush the foe in detail, following Napoleon's favorite maxim, instead of allowing them to consolidate and outnumber him.

Gen. Miles was of the opinion that the action of Friday was in the nature of a heavy skirmish all along the American front, particularly on the right, and that its main purpose was to develop the strength of the enemy and, if possible, learn the vulnerable point along the Spanish front. This, however, was based only on the lack of definite information and Gen. Miles felt that any hour might bring word of a general engagement. Brig. Gen. Stone was inclined to believe that after maintaining their stand Friday, the Spaniards would retire during the night, leaving the city evacuated.

The military authorities here are fully considering the chances of such a retreat of the Spanish army from Santiago and are endeavoring so to shape events that Gen. Shafter's force will not only take Santiago, but will capture the 12,000 Spaniards before they get away northward to effect a junction with Gen. Pando.

ADMIRAL SAMPSON yesterday cabled as follows:

Plaza, Via Hayti.
To Secretary Navy, 3:15 A. M.:

The fleet under my command offers the Nation, as a Fourth of July present, the destruction of the whole of Cervera's fleet. No one escaped.

It attempted to escape at 9:30 a. m. and at 2 p. m. the last, the Cristobal Colon, has run ashore, sixty miles west of Santiago and has let down her colors. The Infanta, Maria Teresa, Quendo and Vizcaya were forced ashore, burned and blown up within twenty miles of Santiago.

The Furor and Pinton, torpedo boats, were destroyed within four miles of the port. Our loss, one killed and two wounded.

Enemy's loss probably several hundred from gun fire, explosions and drowning. About 1,300 prisoners including Admiral Cervera. The man killed was George E. Ellis, chief yeoman of the Brooklyn.

Although there are about 1,000 men at Camp Corbin, Lexington, there is only one full company—that from Beattyville. The Pikeville company arrived Saturday. Twenty men from London and several from Greenup also reached camp. The negro who was stoned and beaten by soldiers Thursday is improving. Authorities have failed to locate the men who assaulted him. The K. P. A. Enroute To Mackinac.

On Board "City of Mackinac," July 2, 1898.

Custom has made the writing of editorial correspondence regarding the Kentucky Press Association trips a religious duty, and consequently the reading public in the Bluegrass State is at the mercy of the Kentucky editors who are now traveling Mackinacwards on their annual pleasure trip.

The K. P. A. met in Cincinnati yesterday and held a short business meeting at two o'clock in the afternoon at the Palace Hotel, the principal business being to distribute the badges and announce the itinerary of the trip. During the afternoon the visiting editors were taken in excursion trolley cars through Cincinnati's beautiful hill-tops suburbs to the Zoo, where they were given a luncheon by citizens committee of the G. A. R. chaperoned by Col. Melish, the newspaper men were "shown the animals," and some remarked that it was a most opportune time to join the Elks. Short speeches were made by Col. Melish, Col. Stoddard Johnson and Col. Loving B. Gaines, after the luncheon.

Senator Goebel telegraphed the K. P. A. an invitation to the Latonia races, but few of the boys visited the over-the-river track, preferring other diversions. The evening was pleasantly spent at the Lagoona, where the amusements include a vaudeville program, boating, bowling, a cyclorama, dancing, etc. Speaking of the chutes reminds me—as Col. Craddock would say—of hearing a girl who was asked to "shoot the chute" that she "never could hit anything she shot at." The Paris and Cincinnati contingent, however, got the correct range on the chute.

The start to Mackinac was made from Cincinnati at four o'clock, and a fast C. H. & D. train sped rapidly through the gas and oil belts, through thriving Ohio towns, through golden wheat fields to Toledo. Everywhere the traveler sees the fine prospects of the Ohio farmers. The hay is being raked, and the wheat is almost ready to be harvested. The corn looks well but is not so far advanced as in Kentucky.

At eleven the editorial party 126, in number—reached Toledo, and boarded the Detroit & Cleveland Navigation Company's magnificent steamer "The City of Mackinac," which is a veritable floating palace. The traveler who has not taken a lake trip on these steamers has indeed missed a delightful experience. The appointments are excellent, the cuisine first-class, and an orchestra plays selections ranging from Cavalleria Rusticana to the popular coon songs while the passenger dines. If I ever get rich enough to afford it I shall not eat a meal without music. But editors generally whistle for wealth.

CANNY INSECT WORKERS.

They Fertilize Flowers For Strictly Utilitarian Reasons.

A correspondent writes: "The theory of the origin of flowers by the selection of insects is one which has attracted much attention both in scientific circles and from the general public. Set forth by Darwin in the 'Origin of Species,' it has been largely developed in a series of interesting publications by Sir John Lubbock and Mr. Grant Allen. Some fresh and interesting light has now been thrown on it by a series of experiments recently carried out by Professor Plateau of the University of Ghent. Professor Plateau has arrived at the conclusion that insects are indifferent to the colors of the flowers they visit, and that they are guided to them in a very subordinate way by sight. The experiments on which the Belgian professor bases his far-reaching conclusions are briefly these: Having covered the brightly colored flowers of single dahlias in his garden with bits of green leaf, he found that they were still visited by insects. This seemed so much at variance with the generally received view that insects are attracted to flowers chiefly by their color that Professor Plateau instituted a prolonged series of experiments and observations to put the matter still further to the proof. The result has been to confirm and strengthen the conclusions drawn from the first experiments. Cutting off the brightly colored corollas of such flowers as lobelia, evening primrose, foxglove, etc., he found the remaining green parts were still visited. Again there are some brightly colored flowers which are seldom or never visited by insects owing to their lack of honey. Notable among these is the scarlet geranium of our garden. But when a little honey was placed on geranium flowers bees came to them at once, those blossoms which had not received honey being passed over.

"Other conspicuous flowers were tried in a similar way with like results. The experiment of removing the honey bearing parts of a flower and leaving the brightly colored part, which was supposed to be attractive, was also tried with the single dahlia. Its inner florets were removed, leaving the conspicuous outer ones, a piece of yellow leaf being placed in the center. No insects went to these honeyless flowers. But as soon as a drop of nectar was placed on them they visited them as freely as before. Again, Professor Plateau made artificial flowers with pieces of green leaf, each furnished with a little honey. These were freely visited by insects. But artificial flowers made of colored material were neglected, even when supplied with honey.

"In further support of his views Professor Plateau is able to bring forward the following facts as to the habits of insects in visiting flowers: They will pass freely and with apparent indifference from one color to another of varieties of the same species growing together in our gardens; they visit a great number of green and greenish colored flowers; there are many small and inconspicuous flowers which are also freely visited. Such is a brief outline of Professor Plateau's observations and experiments, from which he believes himself justified in drawing the conclusion that sight plays a very subordinate part in attracting insects to flowers. Their bearing on the theory of the insect origin of flowers is obvious."—London Times.

The Old Man Was Cured.

"Talk about curing people of bad habits, one of the funniest cases I ever knew occurred on the south side some years ago," said Detective Thomas McQuade. "There was an old fellow over there who would insist on teasing with his wife, who would invariably give him the worst of it. Then he would run up stairs and hang out of the second story window, holding to the ledge, shouting like wildfire that he was going to drop and kill himself. Of course the wife would relent and set up a noise that would bring out the neighbors for blocks, and the man would be pulled in the window by friends.

"This got to be coming too frequently, and some of the boys who lived near, and who had loosened several joints in their spines at different times pulling him in, decided to stop it. One fine day it came again. The old fellow hung out of the window, shouting that he would surely jump and end it all; the wife came rushing into the street in hysterics, and the neighbors ran as before to pull him up. The first man who got there hit the man's fingers with a stick, making him loosen his hold, and, to the horror of all, he dropped to the hard pavement with a howl that was pitiful. He was not badly hurt, but it cured him of that bad habit."—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Queen Wilhelmina's Oath.

The coronation of the young queen of Holland will take place, according to a recently published decree, on Sept. 6. On that day the young woman, with right hand raised, in the presence of the states general, will pledge herself to the following formula, which is a strange contrast to the oaths administered to the Russian and German emperors:

"I swear to the people of the Netherlands to observe and always maintain the fundamental law. I pledge myself to defend and to preserve with all my power the independence of the kingdom, to protect public and private liberty and the rights of all my subjects and to employ for the preservation and advancement of individual and general prosperity all the means which the laws place at my disposal as the due of an upright queen. And may God aid me in my work."

Still They Tramp.

All but four states in the Union have tramp laws. England sends the tramp to the workhouse. France makes him do convict labor. Germany and Belgium put him on penal farms. But in all countries and in all states the tramp goes marching on.—Boston Globe.

Years of experience and the fact that I pay cash for all goods insures good results.

Another important fact not to be overlooked: I am not paying a big rent and this feature is very much to the advantage of the furniture buyers of Bourbon and surrounding counties.

Big wordy advertisements and quoting prices on nothing in particular but everything in general are intended only to fool the buyers and "pull them in." To come to the point: If you want the best furniture for the least money go to Marriage Now A Costly Luxury.

It costs much more to get married now than it did several days ago. Under the new revenue law, every couple seeking matrimonial bliss will have to contribute 50 cents toward defraying the expenses of Uncle Sam. One section of the new war revenue law provides that a 50-cent stamp be affixed to every bond. County Clerk Ed. D. Paton of Bourbon county, for his own protection, requires a bond from all to whom marriage licenses are issued, and the revenue stamp will have to go on the bond. The cost of the license is $2 so the new price of a wife is $2.50.

Those who marry now will, in most instances, be taxed even more than the 50 cents, for the cost of the wedding trip will be increased by the tax on railroad tickets, sleeping-car tickets, excess baggage, telegrams, etc.

IN DOUBT.

In Edith's smile there's hope and cheer
That quite dispel the somber gray,
And all the ills of yester-year
Are exiled from my dreams away.
When she is glad the world is bright,
Her merry laugh dull care beguiles,
Each burdened heart grows strangely light;
There's hope and cheer in Edith's smiles.

In Nellie's tears there's the bluest relief
From ills to large proportions grown;
In lessening another's grief
We quite forget the ills our own.
And be they tears of penitence,
Or tears of joy, each one endears,
The cause is of no consequence—
There's the bluest relief in Nellie's tears.

My heart is by a doubt oppressed,
My heart is but a vane that veers;
It knows not which it loves the best—
Sweet Edith's smiles or Nellie's tears.

A COMMONPLACE MAN

By G. H. DIERHOLD.

THERE was nothing brilliant about Dan Russell, any more than there was about No. 16, his heavy, solidly-built engine, or about the big sleek, grass-fed steers that generally formed the greater part of the load on the trains that he pulled. He was considered one of the most faithful men on the Denver road, but somehow his very faithfulness was of a kind which is generally associated with dullness. In many respects his character was strikingly like that of the road on which he ran. The Denver is a long, monotonous road that stretches up into the Panhandle of Texas over almost endless reaches of seemingly dead level prairie; but all the time is gradually rising toward the lava beds of the foothills of New Mexico, and eventually finds its way across the mountains and into the city of Denver. In much the same way there was a kind of monotony about Dan Russell, but it was a monotony of vastness. It rose by imperceptible gradations to the heights of heroism, and it is barely possible that in the end it also may have found its way into some "continuing city."

Dan never achieved even the distinction of being given a passenger run. In spite of his faithfulness, men of a different turn of mind always seemed to get the promotions. Ben Stikes, his fireman, was a much younger man, and much less experienced in railroad matters, but it was frequently remarked among their friends that Ben was already better liked in official circles than Dan, and that the fireman was likely to get a passenger run first.

There was a certain town on Dan's run known as the "Chicken and Bread" town. It was so called because of the swarm of semicivilized and totally depraved small boys who always met trains there and tried to beguile passengers into buying alleged samples of those two articles of diet. The town is still known by this name from one end of the "Denver" to the other. It is hardly worth while to mention its other name, as this one really lends all the dignity to the town which the facts in the case will justify. The town consists principally of sand hills and saloons, but as it is at the junction of two railroads it has been made the eating station for the crews of several trains. It has several inhabitants, but the one most nearly connected with this story, and decidedly the most important one in Dan Russell's eyes, was Grace Atkins.

Grace was the daughter of a saloon keeper, whose place was near the Denver depot. More than that, she was Dan's sweetheart. This is the best thing I know to say about her. The woman whom Dan Russell loved cannot have been all bad. How Dan managed to become engaged to her, or even to make love to her, I cannot pretend to say. How he managed it, even his most intimate friends never could imagine. It is a matter of record, though, that a brakeman once punched him in the ribs and asked him what the date was, and that Dan blushed violently and stammered something about "promotion." Everything went well with the affair until the unfortunate day when Ben Stikes was transferred to a seat in the cab of No. 16, and to the position of fireman to Dan Russell. Before this happened Grace made it a point to meet Dan's train nearly every time it passed through the "Chicken and Bread" town; but afterward she always met it.

"Somethin' new under the sun," remarked one of the habitual loungers around the depot one day, just after No. 16 had pulled out.

"What is it?" inquired another.

"Grace Stikes."

"Yes? Well, she is to be new. She ain't met No. 16 but about 40 times this last month."

"She ain't never met it on the right side of the cab before. Did you notice it? She alters stood on the left side till to-day."

At this there were several significant grins in the crowd, and several shoulders were shrugged. After several moments of silence spent in looking after the disappearing train, one of the loafers remarked, sententiously:

"D-n good-looking man, any way."

Even Dan Russell's most ardent friend could never have claimed that this imprecation was intended for him.

After this the loafers noticed that Grace stood on one side of the cab just as often as she did on the other. It is barely possible that Dan may have noticed it also, but there was never anything about his swarthy, firm-set face to show it. As the months went on his fireman continued to be as "good looking" as ever, and showed no sign of any injury from the "damning" he had received. Finally a time came when Grace failed to stand on either side of No. 16, or to meet it at all for over a week. Neither man in the cab showed the slightest sign of missing her.

"Somethin' up," the loungers whispered one to another; but no one had an opinion to venture as to what that "somethin'" might be.

II.

One evening as Dan's train was standing on a side track, waiting for the south-bound passenger to pass, Jim Atkins, a long, lazy boy of about 18, a brother of Grace's shambled up to the cab and said, in a voice too low for the loungers to overhear:

"Say, Dan, Grace sez she wants to see you jest a minute."

"All right!" said Dan, with something in his voice as near like eagerness as he was ever known to come. "Whereabouts is she?"

"In the little room jest back of the s'loon." Dan's countenance fell at the last word.

"You know what the rules of the Denver is 'bout their men goin' into s'loons while on duty," faltered Dan.

"Shucks!" ejaculated Jim, contemptuously. "A man that ain't got sand enough to take a little risk to get to see his gal ain't much good. Grace said tell you she ain't well, now."

"Not well?" interrupted Ben Stikes, briskly. "Dan, you just stay here an' I'll go an' see if—"

"Naw, you won't!" exclaimed Dan, hurriedly, as he jumped down from the cab; "I'm goin' myself."

This was the nearest that Dan was ever known to come toward displaying any resentment toward Ben. As he strode away one of his brakemen came hurrying after him.

"Say, Dan," he queried, anxiously, "you ain't goin' over to Atkins' are you?"

Dan nodded.

"Well, I wouldn't. The Ol' Man's in town—so they tell me; kem in at 3:40, an' goin' out on the south-bound. God only knows what he's stoppin' here for, but if he was to ketch you in that saloon, he'd fire you, shore."

Dan muttered some confused reply, but still kept on toward the saloon. It was nearly dark now, and when he opened the door the big coal oil lamp hanging behind the bar had been lighted. Passing through without stopping, he hurried into the room behind. There he remained for about five minutes in conversation with Grace. Just what passed between them nobody knows, but when Dan reappeared in the saloon it was noticed that a broad smile was on his face.

"Made up, did you, Dan? Glad to hear it," said big Bill Atkins, the proprietor of the saloon, as he whacked Dan in the ribs good-naturedly with his ponderous fist.

Dan said nothing, but nodded mysteriously.

Then he hurried to the front door in so much confusion that he collided at full tilt with a man who had just entered.

"Why don't you run over a fellow?" exclaimed the newcomer, rather roughly. Then, stepping back he took a good look at the offender.

"Great Scott! If it ain't Dan Russell! You are the last man on the Denver I'd ever have expected to see in here. And in such a fix, too."

It was the "Old Man." There is no need to give his name or his official station. He was Dan's superior officer in railroad circles, and that settled the matter. Dan hung his head and hurried out into the gathering darkness to make what he knew would be his last run on No. 16.

"What in the devil brought you in here just at this time?" growled Bill Atkins as he scowled at the newcomer.

The "Old Man," who was not so very old after all, bowed rather deprecatingly.

"A young lady sent me a note, requesting me to call. I suppose it was on business of some kind. It was Miss Atkins, your daughter, I presume."

That night Grace had a stormy interview with her father. The more he stormed, the more she wept. It had all been intended for a joke. She had sent for the "Old Man" just to tease Dan and to make him a little jealous. She had never once thought any harm could come of it. So she protested between her sobs. But her father only reiterated with a lion-like roar that although he knew she was one of the bluest of fools in Texas, he knew very well she had never been such a fool as that.

Of course Dan was not discharged; that distinction is reserved for higher officers in railroad circles. Engineers merely get fired; and that was what happened to Dan. If he had been a man of another kind, he might have worked the proper wires and got off with only a short lay-off. Even if he himself had begged hard enough matters might have been compromised. As it was, he merely gave up his place without saying a word. Nobody was surprised to learn that Ben Stikes had been promoted to Dan's place at the throttle of No. 16. In a few days Dan began quietly to look about for another job. He soon obtained a place under the section foreman of a section only a few miles from the Chicken and Bread town. As the foreman was a married man, he and his family lived in town, Dan bunked alone in the section house. It was an humble job for the former engineer, but it was better than nothing.

III.

One night in January Dan was roused from his sleep by some one pounding on the section house door.

"Who's that?" he growled, sleepily.

"It's me!"

Dan recognized the voice, and it must have thrilled him through and through.

"In a minute," he shouted.

Hurriedly dressing, he opened the door and stepped out into the night. It was cloudless, but the force of a Texas "dry norther" was raging.

"Good Lord, Grace!" he shouted.

"You oughtn't to be here. This wind's enough to give you your death. Whew, but it is biting! And, besides, you oughtn't to have come here to my house by yourself, 'way in the dead of the night."

"I came because I wanted to see you. I'm in trouble, an' I've needed you awful. Why haven't you come to see me lately?"

"I-I never knew you was needin' me," faltered Dan.

"Folks have been saying such awful things about me," sobbed Grace. "They pretended like I asked you to come to the saloon just on purpose to get you fired, so that maybe Ben could get your job. Even pa talks that way. You don't believe I done it on purpose, do you, Dan?"

Dan merely shuffled his feet uneasily. "I'd do a heap fur you, Grace, but I ain't tellin' no lies for nobody. What do you want with me?"

This reply was spoken, not sternly, but in so many, straightforward a tone that all Grace's hypocrisy failed her. Instead of sobbing convulsively, as she had at first thought of doing, she merely said:

"Dan, you and me never was fitted for each other. You know that."

"I've knowned for a long time we was different."

"Well, I know I'm not good enough for you to wipe your feet on," cried the girl, giving way to a tempest of genuine tears, very different from those she had been planning only a few moments before. "I want to marry Ben, because he ain't no better than I am, and because—because I love him. Pa swears he'll kill us both if I ever have anything more to do with him. He swears I have treated you like a dog—an' I have. Pa and I had such a racket to-night that I wouldn't go home again under no circumstances. I'd die first! Ben's pullin' an extra to-night. I would have arranged to meet him at the depot and run off with him, but I know pa'll be there with his Winchester, so that's no go. His train'll be along in a few moments now, an' I want you to signal him down so as I can get on and go off with him. That's what I've walked these miles over this lonesome prairie to ask you to do."

"He wouldn't stop if I was to signal him," said Dan. "He'd think I was wanting to do him up. I know him well enough to know that."

There was the merest trace of emotion in Dan's tone as he spoke.

"Dan, for God's sake stop him in some way. I beg you by—the love you have for me."

Just then a light gleamed out on the darkness away to the southwest. It was the headlight of No. 16, just leaving town. Dan gazed in silence for a moment. Suddenly he exclaimed:

"Grace, I'll try it. If the extry's a heavy one I'll make it all right; but for your sake I'd try it if it was the cannon ball express. Stay right where you are. If she stops here, hop on quick; if she don't stop here you may know it ain't my fault. God bless you!"

He started down the track in a clumsy run towards the approaching train. He knew the track well, and he paused when he reached the head of a long grade up which No. 16 was now making its way. It was by no means a steep grade, but it was about as steep as any on this part of the Denver. Then he stepped to one side of the track.

"I guess she'll be goin' about as slow here as anywhere," he muttered. Then he steadied himself for the spring.

Grace was standing by the deserted section house watching the approaching train with a heart that almost stood still as she watched. The train was only a short one, and No. 16 thundered by it at the top of its speed. Ben Stikes was in the cab, but he little thought that the girl he loved was standing there in the darkness and the wind as he passed. Perhaps he thought of Dan, but if so it only caused him to increase his speed. After the train passed, Grace waited awhile for Dan; but no Dan came.

"Dan!" she screamed.

No answer.

"Dan!"

Perhaps he heard her voice as it was borne on the wings of the howling norther; perhaps, on the other hand, he was then listening to such sounds as would render his ears forever insensible to the howling of the night winds, the cries of distressed women and all earthly sounds whatever.

All that night Grace faced the north wind as she walked down the long stretch of track leading away from her home. Perhaps the whistling of the wind and the yelping of an occasional coyote filled her with dread; perhaps her own thoughts so occupied her that she had neither eyes nor ears for anything outside. I only know that early the next morning she reached the little station next above the Chicken and Bread town. She was half frozen to death; but the next day she took the train to Fort Worth. There she met Ben, and the two were married. Ben gave up his run, and the two are said to have gone north to escape the fury of Bill Stikes. Where they are now no one in the Chicken and Bread town seems to know—or care.

Dan's married body was found by the section crew of which he had been a member. The boss expressed himself as wondering why in thunder an old railroader like Dan had not sense enough to keep out of the way of trains. One of the crew thought it might be a case of suicide, but the rest agreed that Dan had too much sense for that, although he was a darned fool about some things. Dan was never very popular, but for that matter, neither was a certain other man of whom I heard, whom Dan resembled, at least to the extent that both of them gave their lives for the unworthy.—N. O. AN INTERESTING CHOIR.

One at Lead Hall Chapel, Near York, England, Sings Only Once a Year.

About a mile from the village of Towton, near York, there is an exceedingly interesting and curious old church, known as the Lead Hall chapel. It is remarkable for several reasons, chiefly because of its age; its small size, probably it would not seat 20 people altogether; its main fittings, and lastly, because of its curious choir.

To understand about this choir it is necessary to review a little of the history of this famous old place of worship. There are two theories as to its origin. It is most commonly believed that this chapel is the one known to have been built by Richard III. in 1461.

It is claimed that the yearly services now taking place in it are a survival of those that were formerly ordered for the purpose of praying for the souls of the good Christians who fell in the great battle. Another supposition declares this chapel to be attached to the old manor house of the Tyas family at Lead Hall, and that the memorial chapel of Richard III. has long since disappeared.

It is obvious, however, that, if this were the case, a service every six months would not greatly edify the people in their spiritual life! Having thus explained the chapel's history, we may go to the choir. There are two services yearly held at the Lead Hall church—one in April and another in October. There is, therefore, no regular body of chorists, but on such occasions a choir is made up from the chief singers in the neighboring towns, who are under the control, for this purpose, of a well-known musical professor in Yorkshire. The majority of the men and boys who make up the choir are drawn from York and Leeds. They receive a stated fee for their day's services and are provided with refreshments.

The regular service of the Church of England is used. The congregation at these services often does not exceed half a dozen people, or half the size of the choir! The vicar of a neighboring parish conducts the services.

Those who maintain the theory of the chapel's origin in the time of Richard III. declare that the king made a grant of money for the holding of memorial services, and that it is for this reason that two services a year are regularly held.—Sunday Reader.

An Up-to-Date Princess.

Princess Laetitia, dowager duchess of Aosta, is one of the most cheerful and up-to-date of European princesses, but she has had the misfortune all her life to be kept much in order. She was brought up with extreme strictness by Princess Clothilde, though occasionally she broke out and openly rebelled. Princess Clothilde insisted on her wearing her hair parted in the middle and brushed smoothly behind the ears, a fashion she objected to much. One day it was untidy and she was sent to her room to do it over again. When, however, she came down to dinner it was found that she had cropped it as short as a boy's. Although she is now over 36 and a widow, she still drives her ladies in waiting to despair by her waywardness, and particularly by her passion for bicycling. Instead of being content to cycle in the privacy of her park, the duchess insists on riding about the public roads of Italy and the Riviera. The house of Savoy is noted for its strict etiquette, and Italian court duennas look on Princess Laetitia with grave disapproval as the latest incarnation of the royal new woman.—Chicago Tribune.

The River of Death.

The word Chickamauga, like a great many other proper names of places in this country, is of Indian origin. It is said to be a Cherokee name, signifying "the river of death," and, according to a legend which has floated down among the Indians, the stream received its name from the accidental drowning of the people of a village by a sudden rise attributed to a cloudburst. Chickamauga is another name of similar character, "the Indian word signifying 'turkey lick,' or a place where turkeys are wont to assemble. Chicopee, the name of a town in Massachusetts, signifies 'the place of birch bark.'—St. Louis Republic.

PROPER CARE OF HAY.

How to Build a Movable Roof for the Haystack Which Assures Absolute Protection.

Few understand the art of stacking so that rain will not get into the center. One great enemy to keeping hay is the wind, especially in Kansas. Many times the farmer gets his hay and grain stacked up in good condition, and along comes a gust of wind and all of his labor is swept away, as far as the keeping qualities of his stack are concerned. Enough hay goes to waste every year on many farms to pay for lumber to cover it. In Illinois, years ago, stacks of hay were roofed with three-eighths or five-eighths inch ceiling. They were hip-roofed, making them as solid as light material could make them; then to hold them in place, four four by four inch posts were set in the ground 14 feet high, with four plates at the top to hold the posts in position and keep them plumb. The roof was placed in position before the posts were set up, having the corners at the cave ends of the roof set so as to permit the roof to slide up or down on or between the posts. Holes were bored in the posts to put in pins to hold the roof up. When it is time to begin stacking, fasten the roof at the top of the posts and begin the stack between the posts. Build to a finish, or in case there is not enough hay cut, put in what there is, stopping work on the stack for any length of time, take out the pins and lower the roof down upon the hay, leaving the hay level, or nearly so. As the stack settles, the roof will follow the hay down and protect it from rain and wind.—W. H. Doane, in Farm and Home.

FACTS ABOUT FLOURINE.

It Contains Very Little Protein and Is Deficient in Bone-Forming Constituents.

Prof. Snyder, of the Minnesota experiment station, has recently made a chemical analysis of flourine, the by-product of the glucose mills that is now being used as an adulterant of wheat flour. His report, which appears in the Northwestern Miller, is not in accord with the claims which have been made for this product, especially in the important feature of nutritive value. Analysis shows the flourine contains so little protein that a flour would have to contain 250 pounds of it in order to get enough protein to enable him to do a day's work. It is deficient in bone-forming constituents and fat as well, and in fact contains little of food value except starch. But still worse, it contains sulphate of soda and sulphuric acid enough to make it injurious to health. Is it any wonder that European consumers of American flour are regarding it with suspicion when there is possibility of it containing such a worthless—and worse than worthless—substance? Is it strange that European governments, which represent people who dare not waste a penny even for bread, are on the alert to protect their people against such an imposition as flour adulterated with flourine? Some means should be found of preventing the exportation of adulterated flour to foreign markets, and also of preventing its sale to our own people as pure wheat flour.—National Stockman.

FACTS FOR FARMERS.

Never hitch a horse to a tree if you think anything of the tree.

Pour hot water into the nest of ants, or use sulphuric acid of carbon.

Cultivate, cultivate, and then cultivate, if you would discount drought.

Don't let your stock get into the public road. It is not neighborly.

It is claimed that one good crop of hemp will destroy Canadian thistles.

Whatever the farmer has to sell now, he can get a good price for. The trouble is that his wheat, etc., is out of his hands, as a rule.

Buy a good harness, if you buy, but that does not mean that you should pay an exorbitant price for it. First class harness can be bought cheap.

Every farm should have its workshop and the means to halfsize boots, and do about everything that is needed in repairing things. It will save lots of money.

If you try to force a calf to learn to drink, you will have a circus. Gently get the calf to the pail, gently induce it to touch the milk, put two fingers in its mouth, and after a few times it will drink.—Western Plowman.

Keeping Sheep in Orchards.

The apple orchard after it gets old enough to bear is the best sheep pasture. One of the greatest advantages of pasturing sheep in the orchard is to destroy the fallen fruit. This they will do even better than hogs, which are usually recommended for this purpose. Pigs will only eat apples after they are nearly or quite ripe; unless they are starved to it. The small, green apples are sometimes almost bitter. Sheep like this bitter taste, and will run to eat the fallen apples, most of which contain codling moths, which would escape into the ground if left in the apple long after it falls.

SECRET OF SUCCESS.

It Consists of Having Good Breeding, Good Hand in Hand with Equally Good Feeding.

There could not be greater error than to suppose that all that is necessary for the young breeder to be successful is to buy the blood and the balance would take care of itself. We might just as well expect a good crop of corn if we plant an excellent variety in a well-prepared, rich soil and then not give it any further attention, as to suppose that our pigs will develop into fine hogs, no matter how well bred, without the proper food and attention. In fact, the work of making the fine hog is only begun at weaning time, so says James Riley in American Swineherd. It is very important to have the pig well bred, as that is the foundation, and like building a house, it is important to have a good foundation. Then by using good material and skill in architecture we build a good, substantial house; so with the pig. We want it well bred as a foundation, then by the proper method of feeding we develop it into a fine hog. No young breeder will ever succeed in the business unless he makes a study of the proper method of feeding pigs, as feed is the principal factor in the improvement of swine. It is well known that by grading seed wheat and seed corn and planting the largest and best developed grains the grain will be improved from year to year; so with the pig. By feeding the pig a well-balanced ration, a ration that will build up all the different parts of the hog, especially the valuable parts—the loin and ham, the muscular or lean. The pigs thus fed till they arrive at the proper age to breed will transmit their good qualities to their offspring, and like the large grains of corn or wheat, the improvement will go on from generation to generation. Pigs should be fed a variety of feeds. The best feed for young pigs is shorts mixed with skimmed milk, fed sweet, or ground wheat, or ground oats with the hulls sieved out. Oat hulls are not good for pigs, but there is nothing better than ground oats with the hulls extracted, mixed with sweet milk. This with a little corn will make a good balanced ration; feed them regular and enough to keep them rapidly growing. The pig should never stop growing. Our best improved pigs should gain at least one pound per day, or it would not injure them to make them gain 1½ pounds per day if fed a muscle and bone-producing food.

HINTS FOR BEGINNERS.

How to Make the Dairy Business Something of a Success Right from the Start.

To those who are about starting a dairy I should advise buying the best natives and grades obtainable and buy them by test and open up an account with each cow as soon as purchased. You can afford to pay more for a cow that will make 300 pounds of butter than you can for one making 200 pounds; in fact, under ordinary conditions the former will make enough butter to give a profit on her keep and the latter will require more expended on her than she gives in return. To all who are interested in the dairy at all, whether it be few or many cows, the only way to improve your herd and be reasonably sure that you will get what you are after is to select carefully, weed out, and breed and raise a herd. This can be done by using a good male, from well-known milk and butter strains, upon your best cows, and raising females. This is the place to invest your money in high-bred pedigree stock. Never on any account breed from a cross-bred or scrub bull. Dairy-men cannot expect to find what they want on the market or get the best cows by purchasing them, for it is exceptional for a man to sell a good cow, and the more advanced a community becomes in dairying, keeping records and making tests of their cows, the harder it will be to secure a good cow by purchase.—Rural World.

HANDY PIG TROUGH.

A New Arrangement Which Will Be Found of Much Value and a Great Convenience.

To get swill into a pig trough is no easy matter if the hogs cannot be kept out until it is filled. The arrangement shown in the accompanying illustration will be found of much value and a great convenience. Before pouring in the swill, the front end of the pen, in the form of a swinging door suspended from the top, is placed in the position shown at b. Keep Up the Beef Quality.

Our Canadian correspondent places a good deal of emphasis upon the damaging results to the dominion stock industry, coming from the crossing of dairy and beef breeds. This has been a very costly experiment to many of our home breeders also. Our field correspondents, in Indiana and Ohio especially, report whole herds which were formerly of a good beef type, as now possessing very few animals that would pass as good grades. One cross of a dairy bull upon short-horns or cows of other beef breeds, will produce a cross that is "betwixt and between" and really is not a profitable animal from any standpoint. The lesson has been a costly one, but perhaps it will be heeded.—Prairie Farmer.

SHE GOT JACK A JOB.

The Naivete of the Young Wife Sifted the Heart of the Railroad Manager.

Two University of Chicago students, both almost penniless, but one blessed with more than an ordinary allowance of good looks, were ensnared by the wily little Cupid, and the upshot of it all was that in spite of the stern rules of the university in regard to that sort of thing they were married. For a time all went well. Both had saved something out of their allowances, and the first few weeks were passed blissfully. But finally the pinches of poverty began to be felt, and one morning while sitting in their little furnished flat far out on the South side the subject of providing for the future came up.

All that day they thought it over, and early the next morning, she radiant in fetching toilet, they started out on their journey. The first place they tried was a railway office. The husband sent in his card to the general manager and was soon ushered into the presence of the official, the wife following. There was no delay in the matter. The husband quickly started the errand upon which he had come. When asked about his qualifications for employment in the railway service he was compelled to answer that he was painfully lacking in experience. At this the official answered that he was sorry, but he could do nothing for him, and turned again to his desk.

Rising quickly from her chair, the wife advanced to the desk of the official and spoke out with: "You don't mean to say that you are not going to give Jack a place?"

The general manager said: "Yes, that's just what I am afraid I must do. You see, he isn't qualified for anything in our service."

"But he was always bright in classes, and you should just see him play football," continued the wife, impulsively.

"Oh, I can readily believe that, but, you see, we require more."

"Then you can't take him?"

"No, I am afraid not."

"But you must, because, you see, we are married, and we must live, and if Jack doesn't find a place we will starve. Please do." The effort was too much, and, laying her head on the official's desk, she burst into sobs.

The general manager clearly did not know what to do. He was not accustomed to such applications for positions, but there was the young husband, certainly a sturdy youth, and the weeping and beautiful wife, and what could he do? He finally decided what to do, for with a "There, don't cry, my dear," he summoned a clerk and soon found that he could find a place and at a pretty fair salary. The pair were dismissed, after Jack had been told to call again the next morning to begin his new duties.—Chicago Chronicle.

Mock Bisque Soup.

The proportions of tomato and milk in this soup need not be uniform. You may use a quart of milk and a quart of tomatoes, providing the two are mixed very carefully at the last moment. The easiest method, however, is to season nicely one pint of strained stewed tomatoes with a teaspoonful of onion juice, a quarter of a teaspoonful of pepper and an eighth of a teaspoonful of mace. Thicken a quart of milk in a double boiler with two tablespoonfuls of butter and two of flour rubbed together. When ready to serve, turn the tomatoes into the tureen; add a quarter of a teaspoonful of bicarbonate of soda, pour in the milk; mix, and serve at once with squares of toasted bread.—Ladies' Home Journal.

When There Is a Swell in the Uniform.

"Look here," said the young lieutenant of a great father, "this uniform you have made for me is entirely too large."

"That's all right," explained the tailor, "when you get it on you'll feel so big that it will be a perfect fit."—Philadelphia North American.

DIDN'T KNOW LIGHT GREEN.

A Bumptious Dominie Who Was a Trifle Off in Distinguishing Colors.

Out of every 50 young men who want to volunteer at the different recruiting stations in the southern district, it is estimated that at least 15 stipulate that commissions shall be the price of their sacrifice. Some of these would-be officers are eventually convinced that as much glory can be gained in the file as in the rank of the army, but the majority go away insisting that they were constituted for command and could not brook the orders of inferior beings.

Col. Koch was visited by a former school principal, who appeared to have the make-up of a desirable recruit. He was tall and broad, and walked with a firm military step. The stranger proved to be a native of the United States and well posted on the constitution of the nation. In accordance with his request, Col. Koch explained some of the manifold duties of the soldier. The applicant was told that he might be called on any time to tear up a fence, build a fire, clean a horse or carry water. These menial chores did not accord with the professor's preconception of the man of war.

"I am accustomed to command," said the principal. "Why not make me a captain?" Capt. Koch did not stop to reason with the caller. He signaled to Capt. Jones, who understood the situation, and who presented himself as the medical examiner. "What's the color of that card in the end of the room?" the captain demanded. "That's pale blue," replied the stranger. "No, it isn't. It's a light green. I'm afraid you're a little off in your colors. In spite of your many qualifications to command, we could not depend upon you to distinguish a Spanish mortar battery from a sequepidalian. We're sorry, but can't use you under any circumstances."—Chicago Chronicle.

A Case of Memory.

The serenader stopped beneath the window. He unstrung his guitar and touched its strings softly and lovingly. Then he looked about the dark shadows of the garden and along the line of fence that marked the street end of the handsome premise.

Nothing was in sight. Looking again at the window, the youth ran his fingers swiftly across the strings, and then, lifting up his head and opening his mouth until the moonlight glittered on his teeth, he began in a shrill tenor:

"Oh, don't you remember—"
But he got no further.
The window above suddenly opened and a large, heavily-framed engraving of the battleship Maine was dropped from within and fell squarely on the singer's head.

"Oh, we remember all right," shouted a hoarse voice from above.

And the startled singer gathered himself together and sadly and painfully went his way.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

A GUARDSMAN'S TROUBLE.

From the Detroit (Mich.) Journal.

The promptness with which the National Guard of the different states responded to President McKinley's call for troops at the beginning of the war with Spain made the whole country proud of its citizen soldiers. In Detroit there are few guardsmen more popular and efficient than Max R. Davies, first sergeant of Co. B.

He has been a resident of Detroit for the past six years, and his home is at 416 Third Avenue.

For four years he was connected with the well known wholesale drug house of Farrand, Williams & Clark, in the capacity of bookkeeper.

"I have charged up many thousands of orders for Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People," said Mr. Davies, "but never knew their worth until I used them for the cure of chronic dyspepsia. For two years I suffered and doctored for that aggravating trouble but could only be helped temporarily."

"I think dyspepsia is one of the most stubborn of ailments, and there is scarcely a clerk or office man but what is more or less a victim. Some days I could eat anything, while at other times I would be starving. Those distressing pains would force me to quit work."

"I tried the hot-water treatment thoroughly, but it did not affect my case. I have tried many advertised remedies, but they would help only for a time. A friend of mine recommended Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, but I did not think much of them."

"I finally was induced to try the pills and commenced using them. After taking a few doses I found much relief. I do not remember how many boxes of the pills I used, but I used them until the old trouble stopped. I know they will cure dyspepsia of the worst form and I am pleased to recommend them."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold by all dealers, or will be sent post paid on receipt of price, 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50, by addressing Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

There were fought 2,261 engagements during the war of the rebellion.

SINGULAR STATEMENT.

From Mrs. Rank to Mrs. Pinkham.

The following letter to Mrs. Pinkham from Mrs. M. RANK, No. 2,354 East Susquehanna Ave., Philadelphia, Pa., is a remarkable statement of relief from utter discouragement. She says:

"I never can find words with which to thank you for what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me."

"Some years ago I had womb trouble and doctored for a long time, not seeing any improvement. At times I would feel well enough, and other times was miserable. So it went on until last October, I felt something terrible creeping over me. I knew not what, but kept getting worse. I can hardly explain my feelings at that time. I was so depressed in spirits that I did not wish to live, although I had everything to live for. Had hysteria, was very nervous; could not sleep and was not safe to be left alone."

"Indeed, I thought I would lose my mind. No one knows what I endured. I continued this way until the last of February, when I saw in a paper a testimonial of a lady whose case was similar to mine, and who had been cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I determined to try it, and felt better after the first dose. I continued taking it, and to-day am a well woman, and can say from my heart, 'Thank God for such a medicine.'"

Mrs. Pinkham invites all suffering women to write to her at Lynn, Mass., for advice. All such letters are seen and answered by women only.

Proposed Alliance with England.

If the United States and England should form an alliance, the combined strength would be so great that there would be little chance for enemies to overcome us. In a like manner, when men and women keep up their bodily strength with Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, there is little chance of attacks from disease. The old time remedy enriches the blood, builds up the muscles, steadies the nerves and increases the appetite. Try it.

A Good Example.

Sold by all grocers and liked by all who have used it, because when properly prepared it tastes like the finest coffee but is free from all its injurious properties. Grain-O aids digestion and strengthens the nerves. It is not a stimulant but a health builder, and children, as well as adults, can drink it with great benefit. Costs about 2½ as much as coffee. 15 and 25c.

Hair Tints

Is your hair dry, harsh, and brittle? Is it fading or turning gray? Is it falling out? Does dandruff trouble you? For any or all of these conditions there is an infallible remedy in Dr. Ayer's Hair Vigor.

"For years, I was troubled with dandruff, large flakes scaling and falling off, causing great annoyance. Sometimes the itching of the scalp was almost unendurable. Prescriptions from eminent physicians, put up in my own drugstore were tried, but failed to afford relief. At length I used Dr. Ayer's Hair Vigor, and in one week I found it helped me. At the end of only two weeks, my head was entirely free from dandruff, and as clean as a child's. I heartily recommend Dr. Ayer's Hair Vigor to all who are suffering from diseases of the scalp."—EDWIN NORDSTROM, Drugs, etc., Sacred Heart, Minn.
